Heart Murmurs in Dogs. Poor Ruggles. Not only is he missing an eye, a few teeth, and has glaucoma, he also suffers from a heart murmur. A heart murmur is an abnormal heart sound caused by abnormal blood flow within the heart, and is typically resulting from a heart valve that is not sealing completely when it closes. Often, it is the vet who will detect it during a routine physical examination. Generally a heart murmur is the result of an underlying cause, which should be assessed and addressed by your veterinarian. Some require no treatment, others, a lower-sodium diet, or medications to address the underlying causes. For more information, ask your vet.
